HOW TO PLAY

- Shuffle the cards and split the deck between the two players.
- Each player deals five cards face-down in a row in front of them. They then add cards on top of four of these, then three, then two, then one – creating five piles from one card on the left, to five cards on the right.
- Players then turn over the top card of each of these piles so that they have five cards face-up.

- The rest of the player's cards is their "sneeze pile" and they do not look at these cards.
- When both players are ready, they say "one, two, three, aaachoo!" and turn over their top sneeze pile card to the centre.
- Players now try to get rid of all the cards from their five piles, following these rules:
 - They may only use one hand.
 - They can place a card on top of either centre card if the total value of the notes on the card is one less or one more.

- Cards have between one and six beats and can turn a corner, so a six can be placed on a one, and a one can be placed on a six.
- As they remove the top cards from their piles, they can turn the next card face-up.
- Every time they get rid of all the cards from one of their piles they can move a face-up card to this spot – always having a maximum of five piles at a time.
- If the players reach a point where neither can play any cards, they count "one, two, three, aaachoo!" again and turn a new sneeze card on top of the central piles.
- The winner is the first to remove all their cards from their five piles.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

This two player game is a great way to practice note values, especially when it comes to semiquavers/sixteenth notes and quavers/eighth notes. By practice adding up these note values as quickly as possible, students will get really comfortable with how they function and the roles they play in music.
